CURRICULUM VITAE

Neil Rettig is a filmmaker and naturalist who began his career in the mid-1970s after attending the Chicago Academy of fine Arts. His award-winning work has been instrumental in the conservation of rare and threatened animals and the establishment of protected ecosystems and breeding projects for endangered species.

Over the past three decades, Rettig has contributed to the production of hundreds of films for National Geographic, BBC, discovery, IMAX, and many others. His study of raptors, especially rare forest eagles, has contributed much to the scientific community's knowledge of critically endangered species such as Philippine and Harpy Eagles. Rettig is known for his innovative camera and technical work, inventive filming techniques, creative eye, artistic composition, and intimacy with the subject. He has won numerous awards worldwide for his cinematography, including six Emmy awards.

Rettig has produced and/or directed over 50 wide-ranging natural history films in such diverse and challenging environments as tropical rainforest canopies, jungle floors, the northern arctic, African volcanic mountains, and aquatic environments. Featured subjects include animal species, ecosystems, scientists and naturalists, rare diseases, evolution and behavior, and continental geology. His work combines storyline, cinematography, and artistic composition to immerse the viewer in the subject's world.

Rettig co-designed and implemented the only cable tracking system used by IMAX production equipment. He also designed and implemented the cable tracking system for the Emmy-award winning documentary "Heroes of the High Frontier", filmed in the rainforest canopies of French Guiana, Costa Rica, and Brazil. His ability to innovate around even the most challenging environments has yielded amazing footage of animals in their natural environments. Rettig is experienced in the newest technologies in cinematography including various High Definition cameras, the Phantom camera, and the RED Epic and Dragon cameras.

Rettig is also a Master Falconer, accomplished still photographer, skilled climber, scuba diver, and animal trainer. He is a frequent lecturer on rainforest conservation, Harpy eagles and birds of prey.
